

Seminar on Developing an Internship Program

Sponsored by The Able Trust

Businesses and organizations looking to create a pipeline of energetic and motivated employees are invited to attend an excellent and FREE seminar, which will provide all the necessary information for developing an internship program. Staffed by two expert faculty, the seminar will also include an HR attorney. The event will include a course book, relevant materials and breakfast.

Internships provide numerous business benefits; they can shorten the learning curve of new employees, create a direct talent pipeline, reduce risks associated with new hires, and fill the personnel needs of the organization. For young job seekers, internships are a proven method for entry to the workforce, providing real-life experiences necessary for a well-rounded education.

Designed for small and mid-sized businesses, but relevant to businesses of all size, the seminar will provide participants with all the necessary information and tools to create an internship program at their own business or organization. The seminar and course materials will provide enough information for participants to leave with a turn-key internship program or a solid base to develop a completely custom program tuned to specific needs and goals.

The mission of The Able Trust is to be a key leader in providing Floridians with disabilities opportunities for successful employment. Although the seminar will be oriented toward considering talented people with disabilities for internship opportunities, the information in the seminar is applicable to all internships candidates.

Lee Iacocca once said, “in the end, all business operations can be reduced to three words: people, product and prices”. He understood the importance of human capital in the workplace. Internships are a way to ensure your business has access to the right people to do the job.
