

WASHINGTON AND LEE SALUTES

Trinitas Christian School Graduate

COLBY GILLEY of Molino, Florida, has received a Johnson Scholarship to attend Washington and Lee University. He will receive at least tuition, room and board, and graduate debt-free.

The scholarships are awarded on the basis of candidates' exceptional academic and personal promise.

Gilley, a graduate of Trinitas Christian School, began classes at W&L in September. He was among 38 winners of the prestigious scholarships for 2016.

The Johnson Scholarship program was established in 2007 as a result of an historic $100 million gift to the university.

Gilley won the scholarship in competition with about 170 finalists who were selected from an initial applicant pool of more than 2,650 high school seniors from throughout the country and around the world.

The Johnson Scholarship is part of a program that includes a lecture series on topics in leadership and integrity and awards grants to about 30 additional students to conduct off-campus research during the summer after their sophomore or junior years.

Washington and Lee University, the nation's ninth oldest institution of higher education, is among the nation's premier liberal arts colleges and universities. Located in Lexington, Virginia, W&L provides a liberal arts education that develops students' capacity to think freely, critically and humanely, and to conduct themselves with honor, integrity and civility. Graduates are prepared for lifelong learning, personal achievement, responsible leadership, service to others and engaged citizenship in a global and diverse society.
